Cassidy Rosenthal is an accomplished construction attorney who works with owners, contractors, subcontractors and designers throughout all phases of construction projects and equipment procurement. She assists clients with balancing the needs of growing businesses while providing measurable risk mitigation through building and managing legal teams across the firm's practice areas. She helps clients navigate complex construction projects from concept to completion including advising on all facets of commercial construction projects such as data centers, manufacturing facilities, food and beverage facilities, distribution centers, schools and universities, transportation initiatives and airports. She regularly counsel clients on the best delivery method for their projects, whether it be design-build, design-bid-build, EPC or construction management. Cassidy collaborates daily with clients' senior executives to deliver key results tied to their contracts, projects, construction manuals, corporate policies and disputes. She has litigated and arbitrated disputes with successful jury and arbitrator awards that included recovery of attorney's fees. She has also served as outside general counsel for clients and non-profits.

Cassidy is a leader both at the firm, serving as Stites & Harbison's Lexington Office Executive Member, and in the community, currently serving as immediate past-Chair of Commerce Lexington. She is a Fellow of the American College of Construction Lawyers and has served in leadership positions with the American Bar Association's Forum on Construction Law.
